delitor of the Courier being one of their beel were not influenced by political artizan feeling, and claims that they entitled to the respect of those who dexclude political and personal feelworthy motives to all the members of the Board in the action taken by them since their appointment. But we would have appreciated this democratic magnatimity of which the editor of the Courier hoasts, and of which he seems to consider himself the champion, had it began at Charleston. It magnatimity or generosity such as is spoken of by the editor of the Courier was really desired by him, or by the Board of the School Fundavith which he ndoubtedly has great influence, it is reae excluded entirely or so nearly so as i not think that a Board of Regrets with a bare Democratic insjortly would have had less regard for the wishes, and given less attention to the suggestions of the Democrats of this county, than has the present Board.

And we say now in all candor, to Democrats and flepublicans, that taking into consideration the action of this Board of Regents and all the circumstances—connected therewith, viewed even with non-partisan eyes, it is, we think, apparent that some of its members were actuated by sinjater motives. We have no doubt but some of

That person who favors his political That person, who favors his political enemies, and who entirely disregards his political friends, whether he do it voluntarily or being the dupe of another, is most assuredly of mean injellect, or is actuated by dishonesty of purpose. The cool treatment of their friends under such suspicious circumstances does not lead one to suppose that these gentlemen were all actuated wholly by the transcendantly magnanimous intention of excluding political and personal feeling from the University. It is a reasonable enough proposition that Mr. Lorentz not be most proposition that Mr. Lorentz not be most proposition that Mr. Lorentz political such proposition that Mr. Lorentz political contents are proposition that Mr. Lorentz political contents are proposition that Mr. Lorentz political contents are proposition to the magnatus proposition that Mr. Lorentz political contents are proposition to the magnatus political contents are proposition to the Mr. Lorentz political contents are proposition to the magnatus political contents are proposi enough proposition that Mr. Lorentz note has nothing to do with his fitness for the position he holds, although it is claimed that his predecessor was badly treated to make rooms for him. It is not just as clear to us badly treated to make room for him. It is not just as clear to us as it seems to be to the editor of the Courie that the capacity of a Secretary for the Board of Regents would not be determined by what he was constrained to do in bringing charges whether 1826 or false against a public officer, when that public efficer figures conspicuously in the determination of who shall be Secretary, and when the charges were of a verye a determination of who shall be Secretary, and when the charges were of so grave a character as they were in this case. When that public officer has been accused of the enormous crime of, plundering the Treasury of the State, whose laws protect thim in the enjoyment of life and property—a crime which if he is guilty ought to consign him to everlasting disgrace and ignominy, can find reasons for adding in the preferment of his accuser, we think he is superlatively magnanimous, if it be magnanimity that actuates him.

A DEMOCRAT.

The Theological Bins. 000 In a late number of the Popular Science Monthly, Herbert Spenogr says: "The evicet of the theological basis, manifest enough everywhere, has been forced on my attention by one whose mental attitude often supplies me with matter for specufation—an old gentleman who units the religion of amity and the religion of supplies attribute contrast. speculation—an old gentleman who unites the religion of amity and the religion of enmity in starling contrast. On the one hand, getting up early to his devotions, going to church even at great risk to his feeble health, always staying for the sacrament when there is one, he displays what is ordinarily regarded as an exemplary piety. On the other hand, his thoughts ever tend in the direction of warfare; fights on sea and land furnish topics of undying interest to him; he revels in narratives of destruction; his talk is of cannon. To say that he divides his reading between the Bible and Alison, or some kindred book, is an exaggeration; but still it serves to convey an idea of his late of feeling. Now you may hear him waxing wroth over the disestablishment of the Irish Church, which he looks upon as an
